Persistent Challenges: Planning for the Year Ahead

In this Issue

NRRO 2020 Calendar

In November 1994, the National Religious Retirement Office (NRRO), the Leadership Conference of Women Religious, and the former National Association for Treasurers of Religious Institutes sponsored a think tank to explore issues related to ongoing viability among religious institutes. One of the many fruits of this gathering was a document called A Critical Juncture: Assessing the Viability of Religious Institutes. Among other areas, the document details impediments to mission, ministry, and membership that can impact the long-term ability of a religious institute to sustain itself.

I often find myself reflecting on these obstacles—which include everything from insufficient savings to a dwindling number of members able to participate in leadership—and how they remain a persistent concern for countless religious institutes. At the NRRO, we frequently see today’s leaders struggle with the same issues that challenged their predecessors. In response, we strive to provide financial assistance and educational programming that can inspire new solutions to old problems, especially as they relate to retirement planning and eldercare delivery.

As a former congregational leader, I understand that one of the greatest challenges to viability is simply finding the time and space to plan. Most days are spent attending to immediate concerns, and few hours are left to prepare for the needs to come. With this in mind, the following pages provide an overview of the NRRO’s financial and educational offerings for 2020. Whether you have one day to spare or just one hour, our hope is that the calendar will enable you to plan ahead so you can take advantage of these opportunities. We are here to support and assist you!

God bless,

Sister Stephanie Still, PBVM
Executive Director
